Mom leaves right away.
She needs to find food,
and for that, she must travel to the sea.

She will walk many miles before reaching water. Her leathery feet march across the snow. Her sharp claws grip icy spots.

When she finds the sea, Mom will feast for weeks.
